IPC Named Among Top 100 Global Providers of Financial Technology

Prestigious recognition reflects company's growth from innovative solutions

Jersey City, N.J., – October 30, 2009 – IPC Systems, the leading provider of indispensable trading communications solutions to the world's leading financial services firms, announced its ranking on the FinTech 100. Each year, the FinTech 100 lists the world's top vertical technology vendors that derive more than one-third of their revenue from the financial industry, as named by American Banker, Bank Technology News and IDC Financial Insights.

IPC Systems ranked 31st on the list of financial technology companies according to their global revenues, attesting to the company's stability and importance to the industry.

"This ranking illustrates IPC's leading presence in the global financial services market," said Lance Boxer, chief executive officer, IPC Systems. "Built specifically for the trading environment, our solutions combine multiple communications options and applications to help traders manage communications and workflow and to organize and process information critical to decision-making. This ranking underscores our team's expertise and commitment to helping provide our customers with top-notch service and a competitive advantage."

IPC introduced VoIP to the trading floor and has delivered over 87,000 IP desktops to 2,400 trading floors and exchanges across the globe. Furthermore, IPC's global network platform ensures fast, secure, reliable access to a community of more than 3,600 on-net financial sites worldwide. Through this integrated approach, IPC's global customer base can connect more rapidly to trading partners across a resilient and diverse network dedicated to traders.
